Bob Livingston, former House speaker-elect, was tricked into giving up his post by Hustler magazine in 1998, according to new tell-all book due in May. Livingston was forced to resign because the skin mag claimed it had proof of the Louisiana Republican's extramarital affairs, according to "Prisoner of X," a book by former Hustler editor Allan MacDonell. Hustler publisher Larry Flynt, above, took out a Washington Post ad offering $1 million for evidence of "sexual indiscretions" by top Republican officials in the wake of the President Clinton-Monica Lewinsky scandal. "We actually had nothing on Livingston," MacDonell told the New York Post.

Prince Albert and seven others completed a four-day dog-sled expedition from Russia to the North Pole, to promote the problems of global warming. The Monaco leader, 48, was repeating the efforts of his great-great-grandfather, Prince Albert I, who made four Arctic trips a century ago.

Two "fake" hip-hoppers from Boston have recorded "Wake Up, K-Fed," a song berating Kevin Federline's attempt at rap music stardom, MTV.com reports. DJ Dirty Beagle and Names, a pair of investment bankers, wrote the song on a Sunday afternoon. Federline's debut hip-hop album, "Playing With Fire," is expected to be released in August. His first single, "PopoZao," has been slammed by many music critics.

George Michael allegedly hit three parked cars Sunday while driving his Range Rover, the Daily Mirror reported. Police caught the British rocker with marijuana in his car three weeks ago.

The diamond-studded watch Buddy Holly was wearing when he was killed in a 1959 plane crash has been sold at auction for $155,350. A woman near San Francisco who wanted to remain anonymous purchased the watch, a spokesman for Heritage Auction Galleries in Dallas said. Holly received the diamond-and-white gold Omega wristwatch as a gift from his wife, Maria Elena Holly.
